BIO:

I joined the Clinical Doctorate team at Coventry and Warwick Universities Clinical Psychology Doctoral Programme in October 2014. My doctoral thesis investigated the psychological impact of cyberbullying on the health and well-being of young people through the perceptions of four stakeholder groups. I continue to research in the area of cyberpsychology. My research interests include cyberbullying and other forms of bullying, stress and coping, as well as the mental health needs of young people and adults. I am interested in the growing influence of technology and the blurring of boundaries between work and non-working life. My other research interests are in health psychology especially looking at experiences of people suffering from various skin disorders/ illnesses, recovery, adjustment and “survivorship” following a diagnosis of cancer and stroke.
