I got a PhD in Mental Health by the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Seville, Spain, in 2006, and my research is about understanding how psychotherapy works, learning from routine real practice, the expertise of therapists and the first-hand experience of patients. My work also extends into the study of the psychosocial impact of disease, with a strong component of citizens and professionals' involvement. As a licensed psychotherapist, my clinical work is as an individual and family therapist in the Service of Counselling and Therapy Psychology, FPCEUP.
